

The Value of Languages in a Multicultural World

An online international conference 13-15 December 2021

Call for papers

Plenary speakers

Jannis Androutsopoulos

University of Hamburg

Alice Chik

Macquarie University

Natascha Klocker

University of Wollongong

Terry Lamb

University of Westminster

Jill Vaughan

University of Melbourne

Katharina Wolf

Curtin University

Multilingualism Research Centre

Faculty of Medicine, Health & Human Sciences

Macquarie University

In a culturally and linguistically diverse world in which languages are as mobile as people, goods and information, how multicultural societies understand and respond to the value of languages is a key question. The aim of this international online conference is to address this question at multiple levels of policy and practice.

Abstracts are invited for presentations and symposia on the conference themes or any other topic relevant to the value of languages in a multicultural world.

Conference themes

- Language learning and use in the community
- Indigenous languages
- Multilingualism, technologies and literacies in education
- Learning and using English in a multilingual society
- Multilingualism in social and professional life
- Geographies of multilingualism
- Media, popular culture and communications

Conference web site and abstract submission:

<https://www.multilingualsydney.org/conference-2021>

Deadline: 27 August 2021